'My proudest moment in nursing in the last year'

'There are so many moments but one that got me "back to life and reality" boosted my self-esteem and confidence was the reference that got me back on my feet. See below.'

Carol Webley-Brown, Queen's Nurse

I worked with Carol between 2018 and 2020 as we worked together in the Lewisham frequent A&E attenders service. I have always been impressed with her work ethic in such a demanding role. She has gone over and above to help some of the most vulnerable patients in the community, which is testament to her dedication to her job. Her experience in mental health, A&E and General Practice makes her suitably skilled for almost any nursing-related role.

She works well with colleagues and has good rapport with patients. Several patients have given feedback to me about how excellent her care has been towards to them. She has excellent communication skills and has presented at various conferences and meetings and I know that she had reports stating how good her interaction with the audience has been.

She is very professional and approachable. Additionally, she has provided me with support and advice on a personal and professional level, which goes above and beyond her role.

In my 12 years of experience as a doctor, there are not many nurses I would recommend as excellent, but she is one of them and as such she would be an asset to any department she wishes to work in.
